

Dear Sir/Madam,

Being a volunteer concerning animal welfare for about 2 years, i have the following comments on the pet trade issue you are going to discuss this afternoon.

i strongly against that the government allows hobby breeders to breed and sell animals on market. there will be no control on the health of both the babies and their mothers, and the number of animal population. it will end up in a disaster. even now the government has no positive solution on the control of stray animals and the welfare of animals has not been improved for decades. all these animals are suffering. how can we face more sad stories?

instead i would like to see the proper licencing to commercial breeding. just like those in the US and Australia. With tight monitoring on the no. of licence, the breeding environment, the proper caring of the animals, the set standard of knowledge of breeding, this is what we hope to see.

too rush here but i hope you could consider my points.

Regards,

Pang Wai Ching (miss)
