

Opinion on HKTDC

After the financial debacle in 2008, we should have learned the free market cannot take care of everything. The private enterprise often focus on short term profit and the greater distant goals for overall good are often neglected. That is why we have government or quasi govt agencies handle different needs of our society.

We believe in the missions of HKTDC who are able to organize a trade fair that is neglected by other private trade organizer because of their nature not in profit making. Often the SME will rely on their TDC's vast resources and network. By the same token, when certain trade fair is already popular and crowded by private trade organizers, is it a time for TDC to exercise self-discipline not to compete in the market because they are perceived to have unfair advantage.
