At the meeting on 28 July 2003, the Panel reviewed with the Administration the findings of the technical feasibility study on increasing interconnection between the two power companies commissioned by the Electrical and Mechanical Services Department. Members were generally concerned about the long lead time in taking forward the initiative to increase interconnection between the two power companies. Members urged the Administration to initiate discussion with the two power companies as soon as possible with a view to making early preparation for future third party access to the transmission network and addressing the transitional arrangements between the present and the future market structure.

The Administration undertook to revert back to the Panel to update members on the progress of the issues in due course.
