Drafting of Legislation

Drafting-related initiatives for improving the quality of legislation
Access to Legislation
Professional development of counsel

Introduction

This paper informs Members of the Panel of the recent steps taken by the Law Drafting Division to improve the quality of and accessibility to Hong Kong legislation and the Division’s continuing initiatives for the professional development of counsel.

2. The overall objectives are to improve the readability and comprehensibility of the laws of Hong Kong and to deliver a more effective and efficient drafting service. A number of initiatives have already been implemented. In addition, there are projects in the planning stage or under active consideration.

Plain language drafting: initiatives related to drafting practices and document design

3. The Law Drafting Division remains strongly committed to plain language drafting and to making the law more accessible. As Members would be aware, plain language is not confined to short sentences and simplified language. It covers a wide range of practices and techniques, including vocabulary, syntax, structure, document design and reader aids.

4. We are systematically examining our drafting practices, primarily to consider how the comprehensibility and the quality of the English and the Chinese texts can be improved. As a first step, a Divisional committee, the Drafting Techniques and Legislative Styles Committee, was established to review current drafting practices. As a result of this ongoing review, a number of changes to our drafting styles and practices have been introduced. A new practice is implemented only after internal discussion, first by the Committee, and then at a meeting of all counsel of the Division.

1 Description of plain language in the paper “Some Implications of Plain Language Drafting” delivered by Professor Ruth Sullivan of the Law Faculty, University of Ottawa, at the conference “Legislative Drafting: Emerging Trends” (6-7 October 2000, Dublin); also published as an article in Statute Law Review, Volume 22, page 145.

5. It is important to note that the purpose of introducing these text-based plain language drafting techniques is not to bring about changes of substance but to improve readability and facilitate the clearer understanding of legislation. They are essentially style-oriented guidelines and rules, designed to make formal improvements to the text without compromising or affecting its accuracy, meaning or legal effect. This is the principle on which new practices will be applied to both new legislation and amending legislation. In view of our practice of making textual amendments to existing legislation, if the new practices were to be confined to new legislation, it would be many years before the use of plain language principles would have any discernible effect on our legislation.

6. For the Panel’s information, some of the more significant changes are described below.

7. Use of “must” instead of “shall” – A change that has already been implemented is the use of “must” to impose an obligation in place of “shall”. Consequently, “must not”, instead of “shall not” and “no person shall”, will be used to impose a prohibition. This new style is now used in all new legislation. It is also adopted when amending existing legislation. We are confident that the use of “must” to impose an obligation in an enactment in which “shall” has been used for the same purpose will not lead to an interpretation that “shall” has a different legal effect from “must” or vice versa. There are existing Ordinances in which both “shall” and “must” have been used to impose an obligation and we are not aware that this has caused any problems in interpretation. The modern trend to use “must” instead of “shall” to impose an obligation is a widely known plain language practice of which courts, lawyers and others involved in legislation would be aware. We would however look for opportunities in amending exercises to change “shall” to “must” (especially in provisions in the proximity of those in which “must” is used), for the sake of tidiness.

2 e.g. Mandatory Provident Fund Schemes Ordinance (Cap. 485); Arbitration Ordinance (Cap. 341)
8. The main argument for using “must” is that it is more in line with a modern, plain language approach to law drafting. Also, many consider that using “shall” to indicate the imperative mood could be ambiguous as it is commonly understood in ordinary language as a way of making a statement about the future. In contrast, “must” has the advantage of being a term that plainly denotes, and is recognized in ordinary usage as denoting, an obligation. The use of “must” to impose an obligation is not new to Hong Kong legislation.

9. Another benefit of dropping “shall” is averting its misuse (for e.g. its use in descriptive and declaratory provisions) and avoiding any doubt whether it is used in a temporal sense.

10. Some common law jurisdictions (e.g. Australia, New Zealand) have discarded “shall” in favour of “must” to impose an obligation. Jurisdictions like the United Kingdom and USA, which have been slower to embrace “must”, are now using it increasingly. The Department of Justice of Canada is currently reviewing its policy on the use of "shall" and is apparently well on the way to adopting the policy of using "must" and not "shall" in mandatory provisions.

11. In the past, a rather artificial distinction between “shall” and “must” was made in the Chinese text by adopting “須” and “必須” as the respective Chinese equivalents. With the adoption of “must” in the English text, “須” will be used as the standard Chinese equivalent. No interpretation problem is perceived.

12. Gender-neutral drafting – The Law Drafting Division has now adopted a policy of gender-neutral drafting. The use of language with a gender-bias is outdated and might even be viewed as discriminatory. Many consider that the

3 An example from existing legislation is the Mandatory Provident Fund Schemes Ordinance (Cap. 485). Section 7A(2) of this Ordinance came under judicial consideration in the CFI case of HKSAR vs CNT Security Company Limited (Magistracy Appeal No. 887 of 2006). Lunn J “Section 7A(2) of the Ordinance is perfectly clear and simple. It states “An employer…. must … contribute”. Subsection (3) provides “… the amount to be contributed by an employer… is”. Clearly, the effect of those provisions is to impose upon the employer a duty to make the required payment as calculated by reference to the appropriate percentage of the employee’s ‘relevant income’.”.

4 The recommendations can be found at (http://www.cabinetoffice.gov.uk/media/190076/shall), referred to in footnote 2.
use of gender-specific language reinforces gender stereotypes. A gender inclusive policy recognizes that the language of the law needs to be sensitive to the beliefs and attitudes of the readers. There is also a wider aim; it improves comprehensibility. Using the masculine gender to include the feminine can present an obstacle to clearer understanding for those unfamiliar with this drafting policy; it is questionable whether in modern society anyone believes that “he” functions as a generic pronoun to include “she”. Some common law jurisdictions (e.g. Australia, Canada, New Zealand, Ireland) have pursued a gender-neutral drafting policy for several years now. Other jurisdictions (e.g. England, Scotland, Wales) are now increasingly practising gender-neutral drafting. A policy of gender-neutral drafting would also be in tune with the gender mainstreaming policies of the Government.

13. There are many techniques to achieve gender-neutrality and we will adopt the technique that would have the minimum effect on brevity and intelligibility in the particular context. Gender-neutral drafting will be used in all new legislation. In amending legislation it will be used in a way that would not have an impact on the existing text.

14. Gender-neutrality has no significant implications for Chinese drafting. If the English text uses a noun to achieve gender neutrality (e.g. “Director” instead of “he”), the Chinese text can follow suit. However, the character “他” is more gender-neutral compared to “he”. For example, “他們” is used for a group of people of both sexes. Therefore, if no interpretation problem is likely to arise in the particular context, “他們” and “他” may continue to be used as they are suitable and concise.

5 “New Zealand and Australia were probably the first English-speaking countries to embrace the principle of gender-neutral drafting as one of the techniques of applying Plain Language to the way laws were written. (The End of the ‘Masculine Rule’? Gender-Neutral Legislative Drafting in the United Kingdom and Ireland. by Christopher Williams, Statute Law Review, Volume 29.)

6 As Members would be aware, section 7 of the Interpretation and General Clauses Ordinance (Cap. 1) does not require the use of “he”.

7 On 8 March 2007, on International Women’s Day, the UK Government gave an official pledge to implement a gender-neutral policy in legislation. Meg Munn, the Minister for women, and the instigator of the change – “It may seem a small thing in one sense, but language is important. We have a society in which we believe men and women are equal, so why shouldn’t the law refer to us equally? Many other English-speaking countries do so already. It is really outdated to have language which refers to ‘he’ when it means women as well. Most people would see this as a normal, sensible way forward”.

8 In the Gender Mainstreaming Checklist for Legislation, Public Policies and Programmes recommended by the Women’s Commission in its 2006 Report (Gender Mainstreaming – Hong Kong Experience), item 27 is “Gender-sensitive language” - Is gender neutral/sensitive language used throughout the legislation/public policy/programmes/press releases or any other related official document?”
15. Harmonising the way in which legislation is drafted – Clearly, stylistic uniformity and consistency in the use of language enhance comprehensibility. Therefore, guidelines are being put in place to promote the use of standard styles and a more uniform use of language\(^9\). To this end, we are reviewing certain types of provisions, to recommend, in each case, a model style. (Examples are provisions that specify statutory time limits; incorporate definitions by reference; create a right of appeal to the Administrative Appeals Board). However, these would be guidelines for good practice rather than rigid, prescriptive, rules as it is difficult to predict all the scenarios that a drafter could face. Also, it is important to leave the drafter with some flexibility to decide how best to achieve the legislative objective clearly and effectively in a given context. Another project that is under active consideration is developing model clauses for standard provisions, as far as it is possible to do so within policy constraints.

16. Use of certain words and expressions – The use of expressions such as “Unless the context otherwise requires”, “Unless the contrary intention appears”, “Where the context admits” will be discontinued. They are considered unnecessary as words and expressions are understood in their context even without this express qualification. Also, from a reader’s perspective, these expressions introduce an element of uncertainty into the text. If a defined term is used in an undefined sense in any context, and a contrary intention is not sufficiently clear, the user-friendly alternative is to indicate that by some specific means (e.g. excluding it from the general definition; using a different term).

17. Modern alternatives or plain language equivalents will be adopted for certain words and expressions often used in legislation; e.g. “despite” instead of “notwithstanding”, “given by” or “has” in place of “assigned” and “ascribed” in referential definitions, and as far as possible, “for” instead of “in the case of” and “if” instead of “where”. A more restrictive approach will be adopted in the use of expressions that can detract from clarity, such as “as the case may be”, “as may be appropriate”, “as may be applicable”, “whichever is applicable” and “as the case requires”. An alternative approach would be to use a drafting technique that dispenses with the need for these expressions. The use of archaic words will be abandoned altogether. The use in the English text of words and expressions that could cause problems for the Chinese text will be avoided.

18. Cross-headings\(^{10}\) – The use of cross-headings, which are difficult to refer to in amending legislation, will be discontinued and they will be replaced by numbered Divisions and subdivisions with titles.

19. Cross-references – The use of cross-references will be limited to cases where their absence could create an ambiguity. The reduced use of cross-references will enhance clarity as they disturb the flow of the text and can sometimes distract more than assist the reader.

20. Reader aids – The use, where appropriate, of reader aids such as notes and examples will be encouraged. An ordinance-specific interpretation provision to clarify their status will be included in contexts in which clarification is required, while the question of a provision of general application is being considered.

21. Initiatives to improve the readability of the Chinese-text – Using shorter sentences is the key to the readability of the Chinese text. We will avoid long sentences and, for that purpose, practise greater flexibility as regards sentence structure so that the Chinese provisions are more readily comprehensible. Further, the effect of the techniques adopted to enhance comprehensibility and readability of the English text would be reflected in the Chinese text. However, ensuring that there is no discrepancy in meaning (whether actual or perceived) between the two texts remains our primary concern.

22. Document design – As a good document design will aid in clearer communication, we have been reviewing the format and visual aspects of our legislation. We have examined the design of legislation in other common law jurisdictions and also considered the possibilities now available to us with new word processing and printing technology. The outcome is that we propose to make changes to the format and visual design of our legislation to make it more user-friendly and attractive. A mock-up copy of a Gazette version of a Bill for a new Ordinance and of an amending Bill, printed in the proposed new format, is attached for Members’ information. The proposed changes will assist the reader to identify the location of and relationship between provisions more easily. The changes also aim at reducing eye strain by a better deployment of blank space and the use of a larger font. It is expected that the new document design and the style changes associated with it will play a key role in modernising the appearance of our legislation.

\(^{10}\) A cross-heading is an un-numbered centrally aligned heading under which a group of related provisions are arranged.

23. Editorial powers – On the implementation of the new document design, in order to achieve uniformity within the statute book, there is likely to be a need to strengthen the editorial powers relating to the production of the loose-leaf edition of the laws. Consideration is now being given to the kind of editorial powers that will be needed to reconcile divergent forms in the new design environment and, in addition, to effect clerical and textual improvements. Naturally, if granted, these editorial powers would only be exercised subject to the fundamental principle that the legal effect will not be altered.

Other initiatives

24. Legislative Editor (English text) – The Law Drafting Division has recently engaged the services of a Legislative Editor (English text). The Legislative Editor will be responsible for examining the English text to ensure grammatical accuracy, and where standardization has been recommended, uniformity of style and consistency in language use. A style and grammar audit of this nature is best conducted from a centralised position and by a person with professional expertise in the English language, and it is expected that the Legislative Editor will fulfil this important task.

25. Special review-related tasks – As we intend to pursue an ongoing process of reviewing and refining our drafting practices, the Division has appointed on contract terms an experienced drafting counsel, whose duties include responsibility for projects designed to advance the initiatives outlined in this paper and identifying other areas for review. Some of the specific duties are developing standard clauses and conducting the necessary background research, reviewing and updating internal drafting rules and guidelines, preparing a version of those for public release and undertaking Divisional knowledge sharing initiatives, including the consolidation of professional and operational advice into a systematic and readily accessible form for internal reference.

26. Style guide for non-Government legislation – The Law Draftsman’s certificate that has to accompany a non-Government Bill attests compliance with requirements as to the “Form of Bills” (Rules 50 and 51(2) of the LegCo Rules of Procedure) and the “general form” of Hong Kong legislation (Rule 51(2)). There is no such formal role for the Law Draftsman with regard to non-Government subsidiary legislation, but the established practice is to send draft subsidiary legislation to the Law Drafting Division for vetting. The integrity of the statute book is best preserved and the Law Draftsman’s role as the keeper of the statute book is best fulfilled if standard conventions of style (whether or not they are matters of “form” referred to in the Rules) are adhered to even in non-Government legislation. This issue is now under consideration. Meanwhile, to assist in the preparation of non-Government legislation, it is proposed to publish a style guide setting out drafting standards and stylistic conventions observed by this Division.

Access to legislation

27. We have been actively exploring ways to further improve public access to our legislation. For this purpose, the Department of Justice has engaged a professional consultancy firm to conduct a feasibility study into the establishment and maintenance of a verified and authenticated electronic database of Hong Kong legislation and the continued publication of the Loose-leaf Edition of the Laws of Hong Kong (or other hardcopy version) with source data from the database. In September 2009, one of our counsel, together with 2 members of the Information Technology Management Unit of the Department of Justice, visited several drafting offices in Australia and the drafting office of New Zealand, to learn from the experience of those jurisdictions in implementing an electronic database of legislation with official status. The information and insight gained from this visit would be of great value in planning any project for establishing an official database of Hong Kong legislation. The feasibility study is expected to be completed by January 2010. We will brief the Panel should a decision be taken to establish such a database.
Professional development of counsel

28. The professional development of counsel has always been a high priority for this Division. The Mentorship Scheme, under which each counsel in the Senior Government Counsel or Government Counsel rank, is assigned to a mentor at the directorate level, continues in operation and plays a significant role in the training of counsel.11

29. Structured and comprehensive training in legislative drafting is also a key element of professional development. Last year, 6 counsel of the Division of the rank of SGC and GC attended an intensive in-house legislative drafting course that lasted for 24 weeks, from 13 May 2008 to 10 December 2008. Further, a series of internal workshops and seminars are currently being conducted for instruction in the principles and mechanics of plain language drafting.

30. Participation in International Drafting conferences presents counsel with valuable opportunities to broaden their exposure and share experiences with, and learn from the experiences of, their counterparts in other parts of the world. The Conference of the Commonwealth Association of Legislative Counsel 2009, which was held in Hong Kong from 1-3 April 2009, offered a unique opportunity for counsel at every level of experience to exchange views and ideas and network with legislative drafters from many jurisdictions. It was a highly successful conference with an attendance of about 150 and was a stimulating and instructive experience for the participants.

31. As information technology is now an integral aspect of the work of any drafting office, participation in legislative drafting IT forums is also a highly beneficial experience for the staff of the Division. In the field of publication of legislation, a new generation of technology has emerged that can meet the functional needs of the legislative-publishing process with much increased efficiency. It is extremely useful for this Division to have access to the progress made by drafting offices that have successfully employed these advanced publishing systems. Two counsel from this Division recently visited the Parliamentary Counsel Office of New South Wales, the Office of 11 Panel Members were informed about the history and operation of this Scheme by an Information paper submitted in April 2006 (LC Paper No. CB(2) 1755/05-06(03)).

Parliamentary Counsel of the Australian Government and the Parliamentary Counsel Office of the Australian Capital Territory. They also attended a Parliamentary Counsel IT forum, held in Australia, with representatives (including 6 heads of drafting offices) from the drafting offices in Australia, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and Vanuatu. The entire experience has been highly productive, particularly from a Divisional perspective, as we face similar challenges as these jurisdictions. What has been evident is that a wise use of modern information technology can greatly enhance drafting effectiveness and efficiency and improve public access to legislation.

Briefing the legal professional bodies

32. Representatives of the Law Society and the Bar Association have been given a general briefing on the drafting-related initiatives and proposals related to access to legislation discussed in the information paper.
