Development of Public Library Services

Purpose

This paper updates Members of the development of public library services.

Background

2. At the meeting on 9 April 2010, Members discussed the provision of public libraries at the district level and the library projects under planning by the Administration (LC Paper No. CB(2)1203/09-10(01) at Annex I). This paper aims to provide further information on the issues raised by Members at the meeting.

Provision of Libraries

3. On the provision of public libraries, the Government makes reference to the Hong Kong Planning Standards and Guidelines (HKPS&G) which state that one district library should be provided for each district and that there should be a district library for every 200,000 persons. Apart from the aforesaid guidelines, the Government also takes into account the geographical and demographic characteristics as well as the infrastructural development of the individual district in determining the library facilities to be provided for the district. Where appropriate, we may consider providing a major library in lieu of two district libraries for every 400,000 population. We may also provide small libraries which play a supplementary role in the library network. For locations where it is infeasible to provide static libraries, arrangement will be made for mobile library vans to visit designated service points to provide convenient lending services for the residents in the vicinity.

4. At present, the Hong Kong Central Library (HKCL), together with the five major libraries, 28 district libraries, 32 small libraries and 10 mobile libraries, constitute a five-tier library network to provide library services to the 7.09 million people of Hong Kong. The present provision of 66 static libraries and 10 mobile library vans in the territory has generally met or in some cases exceeded the standard suggested in the HKPS&G. It is also noted that the provision of library facilities and services in Hong Kong is comparable to those of other economies. According to the Statistical Survey of the Metropolitan Libraries Section of the International Federation of Library Associations and Institutions (IFLA) 2008, each million of population in Hong Kong is provided with 9.46 static libraries, 1.77 million library items, and 209.8 workstations with internet facilities. In Singapore, each million of population is provided with 4.96 static libraries, 1.9 million library items, and 75.4 workstations with internet facilities.

5. The opening of new public libraries involves substantial resource implications. In addition to construction costs, the operation of a new district library requires an additional annual recurrent cost of $14 million and that for a small library is $4.2 million in general. As for the five existing major libraries, each of them requires an average operating cost of about $16.6 million per year. The annual recurrent cost for a new major library with an enhanced space provision and services will be even higher.

6. In addition to providing new public libraries, we have been adopting a multi-pronged approach to enhance our public library services through the following measures:

- (i) Enhancing space provision of district and major libraries to facilitate the provision of new facilities as well as a larger seating capacity and a more comfortable reading environment;
- (ii) Reprovisioning, upgrading and renovation of existing public libraries to upgrade / improve the facilities provided and, where appropriate and practicably feasible, enhance the space provision to accommodate new facilities and a larger seating capacity;
- (iii) Supporting the development of community libraries through collaborating with non-governmental organisations by providing block loans of library materials and free professional advice;
- (iv) Supporting libraries of schools and kindergartens by collaborating with the Education Bureau to implement the “Library Cards for All School Children Scheme” to encourage Primary One students to register for library cards; and through providing block loans of library materials and free professional advice to schools and kindergartens;

- (v) Developing a “library without walls” to enable the public to access reading materials provided by public libraries without physically visiting the public library premises through the development and on-going enhancement of the e-resources collection of public libraries, including online databases and e-books; and
- (vi) Extending opening hours of major and district libraries to facilitate members of the public in making use of the library services seven days a week.

7. More information on the above is provided in the ensuing paragraphs.

Enhancing Space Provision and Facilities

8. Following the recommendation of the Committee on Libraries, the Government has since 2006 adopted an enhanced space provision for new libraries under planning. Specifically, the floor area of major libraries is increased from 3,310 square metres to 6,200 square metres; and the district libraries from 2,200 square metres to 2,900 square metres. The much expanded floor area has enabled the provision of a more spacious and comfortable reading environment and a larger seating capacity.

9. Furthermore, new facilities such as Express Check-in Counter, Young Adult Library (for major libraries only), Leisure Reading Corner, Coffee Corner, Computer & Information Centre, electronic lockers and Babycare Room can now be accommodated where appropriate to provide more efficient, higher quality and user-friendly library services. To encourage the search of information through electronic means, multimedia workstations and Computer & Information Centres are provided in the HKCL, all major and most district libraries. List of services provided by the different type of libraries is at Annex II.

Reprovisioning, Upgrading and Renovation of Existing Libraries

10. We are planning for the reprovisioning and upgrading of one major library, two district libraries and three small libraries to larger premises in the coming four years. There are also ongoing programmes to improve the facilities and reading environment of some existing libraries. Under these programmes, libraries which have been in service for 10 or more years will be renovated by phases. So far, the facilities of 44 libraries have been significantly upgraded through renovation.

Supporting Community Libraries

11. The Libraries@neighbourhood - Community Libraries Partnership Scheme, launched in 2005, has served to supplement the library services provided to targeted social and aged groups, thereby extending library services to different parts of the community. Under the Scheme, the Leisure and Cultural Services Department (LCSD) will assist and collaborate with non-governmental organisations to set up community libraries by providing block loans of library materials and free professional advice. The Scheme is welcomed by local residents, in particular children, teenagers, housewives and senior citizens who enjoy more convenient access to library materials within their neighbourhood. As at June 2010, there are 153 community libraries operating in 18 districts. The total number of library materials on loan since the launching of the Scheme has reached 4 million items.

Development of “Library Without Walls”

12. Our public libraries aim to provide a balanced collection of print and non-print materials to meet public needs for knowledge, information, lifelong learning, research and leisure reading purposes. At present, e-resources collection consists of three main components: CD-ROMs, online databases (including e-books), and digitized materials stored in the Multimedia Information System (MMIS). The provision for purchase of e-resources in 2010-11 is $8.3M which represents about 10% of the total annual provision of library materials.

13. As at end of March 2010, there are some 86,000 CD-ROMs for home lending as well as reference use at libraries. In addition, 59 subscribed online databases (11 of which are also accessible through Internet) and an e-book collection are available. The electronic databases cover a wide range of subject fields from quick reference encyclopedic resources, news and current awareness information, statistical information, business directories, market information, macro-economic data, popular general interest magazines, business periodicals and scholarly journal articles on a wide range of subjects. Altogether the libraries have at present 48,000 e-books (40,000 in Chinese and 8,000 in English). The MMIS contains about 4,000 hours of digitized audio-video materials and over 2 million pages of digitized documents including old Hong Kong newspapers, maps, posters, clippings, books, house programmes, photos, manuscripts and papers of the two former Municipal Councils. Most of these digitized items are related to local heritage and culture.

14. To commensurate with the rapid development of the information age and meet the changing needs of the community, we will continue to closely monitor and evaluate the market trend of e-book and database publishing, and strengthen the e-resources collection to serve Hong Kong people as a "library without walls".

Extension of opening hours

15. Since April 2009, the opening hours of all 33 major and district libraries have been increased from 61 or 62 hours to 71 hours a week to provide more convenient services to the public. Under the new arrangement, the major and district libraries now open at 9:00 a.m. daily¹, and operate until 8:00 p.m. on all weekdays and Saturdays. On Sundays and public holidays, they operate from 9:00 am to 5:00 pm. The opening hours of these libraries have also been aligned to provide services seven days a week. The new initiative has enabled different user groups to visit libraries during the extended hours. In the first 12 months after the extension, the total number of library materials borrowed and the total attendance in these libraries have recorded a growth of 4% and 8% respectively over the 12-month period preceding the extension.

16. In the process of formulating the pattern of opening hours currently in practice, we have considered the needs of the public, the library usage pattern, and the cost-effectiveness of all viable options. The recent extension of opening hours of the 33 libraries incurs an additional recurrent cost of $34 million per year, including the addition of 75 permanent establishment posts² and meeting additional expenses arising from electricity, cleansing, security, book transit and other necessary miscellaneous costs.

17. The extension of the opening hours of public libraries has substantial financial and manpower implications. If the opening hours of all 42 small and mobile libraries were to be extended to 71 hours a week, an additional annual expenditure of $68 million and the creation of 240 permanent posts would be required. In the public library system, the small and mobile libraries perform a supplementary role of major and district libraries. The number of library materials borrowed from these libraries only accounts for 16% of the total number of materials borrowed from all public libraries. Due to the small set-up of these libraries, extension of opening hours from the current level to seven days a week would require substantial increase in their manpower. On the other hand, if the weekly opening hours of the HKCL and 33 major and district libraries were to be further increased to 91 hours by extending their closing time to 10 p.m., our preliminary estimate shows that an additional 350 permanent posts and an additional $120 million in recurrent expenditure per year would be required³. We will continue to closely monitor the usage of library services and enhance our public library services through the multi-pronged approach mentioned above.

² including 17 Assistant Librarians and 58 Assistant Clerical Officers.

The Public Libraries Advisory Committee

18. The Public Libraries Advisory Committee (PLAC) was set up in 2008 to advise the Government on the overall development strategies of the public libraries, including mapping out the vision, missions and key strategies for steering the planning of library development in the coming decade. The PLAC with membership list at Annex III will continue to advise the Government specifically on the formulation of strategies and measures for the development of library facilities and services; the role, functions and management of the HKCL; and the encouragement of community support and partnership with different sectors in promoting reading, life-long learning and literary arts. Since its establishment in 2008, the PLAC has made valuable contributions by rendering LCSD with useful and insightful advice on a wide range of matters, including the development of thematic collections to better meet the public's information needs, the further enhancement on the level and scope of library service through leveraging on information technology, the development of the HKCL to become Hong Kong's major information repository on Hong Kong's historical and cultural matters, and the most important of all, the formulation of a five-year strategic plan for the development of public library service.

Way Forward

19. The Government will continue to adopt a multi-pronged approach mentioned in paragraph 6 above to enhance the overall library services to meet the changing needs of the community. Besides the hardware provision, we also strive to augment the software support of library facilities, particularly through the upgraded/advanced application of information technology, such as the development of "wall-less" library, upgrading of the LAS and the MMIS, so as to enable the public to enjoy high quality, user-friendly, efficient and easily accessible library services. The deployment of Radio Frequency Identification (RFID) Sub-system on a pilot basis starting from 2011 is expected to further enhance the efficiency of major library processes, including lending and returning of library materials, sorting, shelving and inventory management of library items. Should the experience gained in the pilot test be satisfactory, we will draw up proposals for the full implementation of the RFID system in all libraries, including the feasibility of providing self-service facilities beyond the library premises.

³ Under the existing opening hours pattern, the HKCL, major and district libraries need to deploy two shifts of staff to work on 5 days per week, and only one shift on the other two days, i.e. one day when the library opens at 12 noon for cleansing and on Sunday (until 5 p.m.). Should opening hours of these libraries be extended to 10 p.m. seven days a week (i.e. increase from the present level of 71 hours per week to 91 hours), two shifts of staff would be needed 7 days per week, thus resulting in a substantial increase in the manpower required.

Provision of Public Libraries at District Level

Purpose

This paper updates Members on the present position regarding the provision of public libraries at the district level.

Background

2. On 8 July 2009, an information paper setting out the additional public library facilities proposed by the 18 District Councils and the provision of libraries under planning by the Administration was circulated to Members. The Panel agreed at its meetings on 10 July 2009 and 15 October 2009 to further discuss the issue.

Provision of Libraries

Public libraries and services

3. The provision of public libraries is made with reference to the current Hong Kong Planning Standards and Guidelines (HKPS&G) which state that one district library should be provided for each district and that there should be a district library for every 200 000 persons. At present, the 7.03 million people of Hong Kong are served by 66 static libraries and 10 mobile library vans (Annex A). Generally speaking, the present provision of public libraries in the territory has met the standards suggested in the HKPS&G.

4. On the recommendation of the Committee on Libraries (CoL), the Government has since 2006 adopted an enhanced space provision for new libraries under planning by increasing the floor areas from 3,310 square metres to 6,200 square metres for major libraries; and from 2,200 square metres to 2,900 square metres for district libraries. The expanded floor area has enabled the provision of a more spacious and comfortable reading environment and a larger seating capacity.

Furthermore, new facilities such as Express Check-in Counter, Young Adult Library (for major libraries only), Leisure Reading Corner, Coffee Corner, Computer & Information Centre, electronic lockers and Babycare Room can also be accommodated where appropriate to provide more efficient, higher quality and user-friendly library services. To encourage the search of information through the use of information technology, multimedia workstations and Computer & Information Centres are provided in the Hong Kong Central Library (HKCL), all major and most district libraries.

5. For new facilities, three district libraries and a small library are under planning. The three district libraries are the second Tseung Kwan O Public Library, Yuen Chau Kok Public Library and Tung Chau Street Public Library, and the small library is in Siu Sai Wan.

6. In addition to new libraries, we are planning for the reprovisioning and upgrading of one major library, two district libraries and three small libraries to larger premises (Annex B). Among them, the district library at Tin Shui Wai will be upgraded to a major library and the small library at Lam Tin will be upgraded to a district library. Together with the new district library in Tung Chung to be opened in a few months' time, all these new and reprovisioned libraries will meet the enhanced space provision recommended by the CoL and be provided with the added facilities as set out in paragraph 4 above.

7. Apart from setting up new libraries and reprovisioning some of the existing libraries to larger premises, there are also ongoing renovation programmes to improve the facilities and reading environment of some existing libraries. Under these renovation programmes, libraries which have been in service for 10 or more years will be renovated by phases. So far, the facilities of 44 libraries have been significantly upgraded through renovation (Annex C).

Community libraries

8. The Leisure and Cultural Services Department (LCSD) has since 2005 introduced the Libraries@neighbourhood - Community Libraries Partnership Scheme as one of its initiatives to further promote reading and enhance collaboration with local community organisations. The scheme serves as an effective means to supplement the existing library services to meet the increasing demand in the community. Under the scheme, community libraries are set up through collaboration with non-profit making organisations, in which the Hong Kong Public Libraries (HKPL) offers block loan of library materials and free professional advice to the participating organisations in the setting up of the libraries. These community libraries further enhance the provision of library services at district levels by providing local residents, especially children, teenagers, housewives and senior citizens easy access to library materials within their neighbourhood. Presently, about 139 community libraries are operating across the 18 districts.

Proposals from District Councils

9. We have received a number of proposals for additional library facilities from the District Councils. The Administration circulated to Members a position report on these proposals on 8 July 2009. The report has been further updated at Annex D for Members' information.

Application of Information Technology in Public Libraries

10. The LCSD has launched an array of initiatives, including the upgrading of the Library Automation System (LAS) and the Multimedia Information System (MMIS), to tie in with the expansion of the library system.

Upgrading of LAS

11. The existing LAS is one of the world's largest library computer systems with both Chinese and English capabilities. We are in the process of implementing a project to replace the existing system. We aim to launch the new system in mid-2011 and complete the whole upgrading exercise by phases in mid-2013.

RFID Sub-system Pilot Test

12. To coincide with the implementation of the new LAS, a pilot test of a Radio Frequency Identification (RFID) sub-system will be conducted at six libraries (two major, two district and two small libraries) by end of 2011. The deployment of RFID sub-system, which replaces the paper bar-code labels on library materials with RFID tags, is expected to further enhance the efficiency of the major library processes, including lending and returning of library materials, sorting, shelving and inventory management of library items. Should the experience gained in the pilot test be satisfactory, the HKPL will draw up proposals for the full implementation of the RFID system in all libraries.

Upgrading of MMIS

13. The MMIS is a digital library system of the HKPL. It has opened up new realms for information retrieval by offering the public instant access to a wide variety of digital documents, audio and video programmes. It provides a convenient one-stop search function enabling library users to explore the library multimedia archives via the Internet or through workstations in the HKCL and the 26 major and district libraries. The system also facilitates the public's access to digital contents, such as digitised newspapers, photos, news clippings, maps, manuscripts, etc. For long-term development, a Major Upgrade Project of MMIS is underway and the whole exercise is expected to be completed in 2012.

14. With the full implementation of the LAS, RFID and MMIS systems, the public libraries will enter into a new era of high technology whereby the public can enjoy higher quality and more efficient library services with convenient access to a whole spectrum of electronic information and printed materials.

Way Forward

15. The Government will continue to enhance the provision of public library services through the planning of new facilities, the upgrading, reprovisioning and renovation of existing libraries and the application of information technology in the delivery of its services. We will also encourage the setting up of more community libraries to supplement the provision of public libraries by providing the local community with convenient and easy access to the library materials within their neighbourhood. With the concerted efforts of the Government and the community organisations, we will be able to provide high quality, user-friendly and easily accessible library services to the public to support their pursuit of life-long learning.
