

For information
on 17 May 2016

Legislative Council Panel on Manpower

Provisions on maternity leave under the Employment Ordinance

Introduction

This paper briefs Members on the provisions on maternity leave under the Employment Ordinance (“EO”) (Cap. 57).

Background

2. EO started to provide pregnant female employees with maternity leave in 1970. EO at that time provided that a pregnant employee who had been employed under a continuous contract<sup>1</sup> for not less than 26 weeks would be entitled to maternity leave. A pregnant employee might take maternity leave four weeks before the employee’s expected date of confinement and six weeks after confinement. At that time, EO did not require an employer to pay for the maternity leave taken by the employee. Paid maternity leave was introduced in 1981, whereby a pregnant employee who had been employed under a continuous contract for not less than 40 weeks immediately before the commencement of maternity leave would be entitled to maternity leave pay at the rate of two-thirds of her wages. In 1995, the rate of maternity leave pay was raised to four-fifths of the employee’s wages.

Existing provisions

3. The existing EO provisions have accorded protection for pregnant employees in the aspects of health, employment protection, maternity leave and maternity leave pay.

---

<sup>1</sup> According to EO, an employee who has been employed continuously by the same employer for four weeks or more and has been working for at least 18 hours each week is regarded as being employed under a continuous contract.

4. Under EO, a pregnant employee who has been employed under a continuous contract immediately before the commencement of her maternity leave is entitled to a continuous period of 10 weeks' maternity leave. The employee may commence her 10-week maternity leave 4 weeks before the expected date of confinement. With the agreement of her employer, a pregnant employee may choose to commence her 10-week maternity leave from 2 to 4 weeks before the expected date of confinement.

5. A pregnant employee who has been employed under a continuous contract for not less than 40 weeks immediately before the commencement of maternity leave is entitled to maternity leave pay. The maternity leave pay is a sum equivalent to four-fifths of the employee's average daily wages. If confinement occurs later than the expected date of confinement, the employee is entitled to a further leave period equal to the number of days from the day after the expected date of confinement to the actual date of confinement. If the employee encounters health problems owing to pregnancy or confinement, the employer shall grant to the employee an additional period of leave of up to four weeks. Besides, any day on which a pregnant employee is absent from work to attend medical examination in relation to her pregnancy, post confinement medical treatment or miscarriage shall be counted as a sickness day if supported by an appropriate medical certificate. With the agreement of the employer, the employee may take further leave and, in such situation, the continuity of her employment shall not be affected.

6. Apart from paid maternity leave, EO explicitly prohibits employers from allocating to pregnant employees work involving handling of heavy materials, working in places where gas injurious to pregnancy is generated, or doing other work injurious to pregnancy. Further, an employer who dismisses an employee during her pregnancy or maternity leave (except for summary dismissal owing to the employee's serious misconduct) commits an offence and is liable, upon conviction, to a maximum fine of $100,000.

7. The existing provisions on maternity protection under EO have provided suitable protection for pregnant employees and have struck a reasonable balance between the interests of employers and employees. In assessing whether to further improve maternity benefits for pregnant employees, we have to take into consideration Hong Kong's socio-economic situation and whether there is consensus in the community.

Conclusion

8. The Government will, having regard to the pace of Hong Kong's social changes and economic developments, and on the premise of striking a reasonable balance between the interests of employers and employees, continue to give careful consideration to improving employees' rights and benefits progressively.

Labour and Welfare Bureau
Labour Department
May 2016