

Hong Kong ivory ban legislation
Briony Mamo to: panel_ea@legco.gov.hk

01/06/2017 14:31

To whom it may concern,

I heard from a colleague this morning that there is the potential for HK legislation regarding the banning of ivory to be either delayed or worse yet, cancelled.

It is ridiculous that ivory traders, now globally considered atrocious criminals, are demanding compensation when they were given an exceedingly lenient amount of time to recoup their losses from ivory sale. Twenty-five years is ample time and the world, let alone the Hong Kong government, owes them nothing and should certainly not provide compensation.

This email is to voice my support for Hong Kong's ivory ban legislation and I would further support more stringent regulations and harsher fines.

Thank you for your time,

Briony Mamo BABSc (Hons) PhD
University of Hong Kong Postdoctoral Fellow
School of Biological Sciences
Rm 3N-11 Kadoorie Biological Sciences Building
(6N01 general office)
The University of Hong Kong
Pokfulam Road,
Hong Kong SAR, China
Tel: +852 [REDACTED]
Email: [REDACTED]