

I want to ask all the members from the pro-establishment camp, including Cheung Bing Learn, who perhaps got abducted by an alien today, who knows, I just want to ask you guys, have you ever thought about actually being a human being? I don't know if you know this, but using your heart to actually listen to what another person has to say is an expression of love and your humanity. Have you ever listened to what the villagers from Wan Chau has to say? Have you ever made an effort into getting to them know on a human-to-human level, of knowing the emotive ties that they have to their homes? Or have you simply just treated them as numbers on a spreadsheet, as empty spaces on a map 'waiting' for you to dispossess them? If so, your not a human being, and its time to rethink your strategy on how you want to live your life. If you deep down indeed admit that you have never listened to what the villagers has to say, or perhaps even 'the Hong Kong people' as a whole, can you really make the claim that you are indeed 'for the Hong Kong people' or that 'you love Hong Kong' as you often you say do? Just think about it, if your mom or dad is a Wan Chau villager, what emotions will be going through your head at the moment? The government thinks that moving 'people' is easier than moving 'things' with no life whatsoever in the brownfield. The government consulted the 'powerful' but not the 'less powerful,' who are your parents and friends. Will you perhaps feel angered? After the government dispossesses them, "well, sad day for you!" What a sucker, you're on your own! Will you perhaps feel cheated? Will you perhaps think that this Hong Kong government is not 'for me,' but for the 'powerful'?

Lei day yau mo lern g ga?

Lei day yau mo yun sing ga?

If you're, as of now, unsure of how to respond to such questions, I really do hope you consider what I have to say, and how you will be treating villagers from Wan Chau from this point on will be equivalent towards how you will be treating your long lost humanity. With prayers from my heart. Many thanks!
